Famous New York Surgeon Says Man's Natural Span Is 100 Years.

FINE FORM HIMSELF

He Was Resident Surgeon of Bellevue Hospital Seventy Years Ago.

Believing it has been "scientifically es tablished' through biology and physiology that the span of human life is 186 years, Dr. Stephen Smith, dean of New York surgeons, packed his grip last Tuesday morning and in company with Mrs. W. C. Mason, his eldest daughter, started westward through the snowdrifts to celebrate his ninety-seventh birthday

Mrs. James M. Pratt, Dr. Smith's youngest daughter, said at her home at 1000 Park avenue yesterday that she believed her father was at Battle Creek, Mich., with his old friend Dr. J. H. Kellogg. But he has grown increasingly fond of new scenes and faces with the march of years, so Mrs. Pratt wouldn't be surprised to learn that the birthday party was held almost anywhere between here and San Francisco. She doesn't expect Dr. Smith home again for a onth. Dr. Smith, who was bern on friher's farm, near Skaneateles, N. Y., in 1823, when John Adams and Thomas Jefferson and James Madison and La-fayette were still Hving, left a birthday memorandum behind when he started on his trip. In it he asserted his belief that it had been proved through science that man was designed to live for a century.

"Biology teaches us," Dr. Smith said, that the human body is constructed to live 100 years; that it is composed atoms as a house is composed of bricks; that each atom has a certain function to perform and then dies, is removed from the body and its place is filled by a new atom of the same material; that this material varies according to the func-tions to be performed by the atom, as ister to the Netherlands, arrived yester-dates. On the other hand, it would be those composing bone, muscle, nerve, &c.; day by the Red Star liner Lapland from harder for Samuel Koenig's organization that by this process, the entire body is continually being renewed. Practically we learn from this statement that the human body is a machine which is so constructed that by constant renewal it will exist 100 years."

The doctor explained that he had "scarcely a well day until he was 50," indigestion and consequent autointoxication restricting him to the "simple life," which, he says, "insures to its votaries the possibility of living all their appointed days." From his fiftieth birthday to the present time. Dr. Smith declares that his health has constantly im-

"Looking backward from my somewhat elevated viewpoint of nearly a century," said he, "the changes in everything pertaining to human iffe and its various activities have been so extensive and so radical that I seem to have tived in two worlds-certainly in two widely different civilizations.
